The mission of the Easter bunny

It was the night right before Easter. The Easter bunny had a mission to deliver and hide Easter eggs all around the small town that he lived in. He really enjoyed hiding the Easter eggs, because later on he could see the excitement in the kids' faces when they would find an egg or two. The kids loved the different colors and patterns on the eggs.

It has felt like a tradition to accomplish this mission with his lovely friend - Finn the chick. They had developed a great friendship everytime they had a mission like this. They decided to meet up near the town's small fountain and plan how and where they would hide their Easter eggs there. After they had figured out the plan, they started hiding the eggs in the nearby bushes. But when they turned around to get more eggs, the bag full of coloured eggs had disappeared. Both of them started to panic, but then Finn looked to the side and he caught a glimpse of a mysterious fox dragging the bag behind a big oak tree. They started to follow the fox and once they were behind the tree, both of them had the same surprised look on their faces. Behind the tree, there were four, a lot smaller foxes and along with the mysterious fox, probably their mother, they were trying to eat the painted Easter eggs. The Easter bunny and the chick felt really bad for the poor little fox family at that moment. So they decided to make a deal with the mother fox: they would take the bag full of eggs and finish hiding them for the children, then come back at the same place on Easter morning with a bunch of food for the fox family to eat.

On Easter morning, while the foxes were looking at all the different foods that the bunny and the chick had brought them, there were already a lot of children outside running around happily and searching for the Easter eggs. The Easter bunny and Finn the chick were looking fairly satisfied, knowing they had accomplished their mission once again.
